

PHOTOS © CONNIE SELLERS, MATT ALLISON, SANDY ROGERS

On the Cover

9 Rear Cross Flatwork Games

Flatwork games are based on the handling moves that you will use when negotiating an agility course—but you don't need any equipment. These games will teach your dog to read your body language for a rear cross. By Connie Sellers

21 From Crate to the Starting Gate

Navigating to the gate at a trial can feel like you and your dog are "running the gauntlet." Let's look at some strategies for management and training that can be used to help you and your dog safely navigate through the crowded trial environment. By Jamie McKay CPDT KSA

28 Mental Resilience in Dog Agility

Competing in agility requires more of a dog than just trained skills. The more resilient dogs are, the easier they will adapt to different environments, embrace new experiences, cope with stress, maintain focus and self-control, handle environmental stimuli without becoming overwhelmed. By Bobbie Bhambree

43 Practically Training: Lead-Outs, Part 1

Leading out with confidence like you're relishing your team's moment on center stage will help convince your dog to come flying off the start line ready to conquer the world. By Sandy Rogers

Features

4 Tip of the Month – Here's a do-it-yourself long jump. By Marcy Rauch

5 Editorializing: Bounce Back – While the exhaustion of weekends spent traveling, setting up, trialing, and breaking down certainly contributes to handler burnout, how much does lack of mental resilience factor in burnout? By Brenna Fender

Cover Dog

MACH4, C-ATCH2 Nozomi's Double Black Diamond RN, MXC, PAD, MJB2, PJD, MXF, T2B2, CA, a.k.a. Diamond, an 8-year-old Shiba Inu owned by Mark and Eunice Giles (handled by Mark) of New Hampshire. Photo by Jeremy Kezer Photography.

6 Let's Talk About... A Sad Goodbye to Agility –

Can we make trials safer for all dogs? By Janice Pier

13 Beginning Sequencing with Box Work –

Once your training on individual obstacles is done, it's time to start sequencing! Here we'll discuss introducing box work as well as provide many sequences to try on your own. By Jo Sermon

26 Backyard Dogs –

These sequences are designed for practicing your verbal directional cues. Focus on the directionals rather than other cues. By David Bozak

31 Team Small Dog Agility Humility: Yelp Reviews of Dog Agility –

Everyone's got an opinion! By Laura Hartwick

35 The 25% Solution: Sequences for Small Spaces –

This month's exercises include mini-courses for practicing how to take advantage of the new repeat and move on or fix and continue rules as well as relay courses. By John Reid

37 Power Paws Skills: Blind Tunnel Entrances –

A blind tunnel entrance is one in which the entry cannot be seen by the dog, or faces away from the dog's line, or is not readily apparent. These kinds of tunnel entries need to be trained as a specific skill and not just "handled." By Nancy Gyes

41 Mental Management Minute: Coping Skills –

If you feel stressed or anxious at agility competitions, coping skills are an excellent way to reduce those feelings. Here are some techniques you can use to get your mind off the concern and calm your mental state. By Brenna Fender

46 Any Dog Can Have Awesome Contacts from a Distance: Part 3 –

Establishing fast, independent, and solid stopped contacts when you're at a distance from your dog is a many-faceted project. However, when approached methodically, pretty much any dog can have awesome results. By Stacy Winkler