6 Walking the Course, Not Connecting the Dots

There are many ways to memorize courses, but splitting a course into segments, as opposed to individual obstacles, will help you see smooth lines through those obstacles. By Jo Sermon

15 The Three Hats of Agility, Part 3: The Handler's Hat

Non-judgmental, realistic self-assessment is essential to improve in agility. This month learn how to identify your strengths and weaknesses as a handler. By Sandy Rogers

23 Global Judging Program: An Introduction

Presented by two of the most distinguished and respected judges and agility handlers from the UK, Greg Derrett and Lee Gibson, the Global Judging Program helps maximise learning and development of vital judging skills that stretch further than the confines of the ring rope. By Lee Gibson

47 Troubleshooting the Teeter Exit for Small Dogs

The teeter creates a number of challenges for any agility dog, but for the smaller dogs, a few unique considerations come into play when training this obstacle. By Linda Womer

Features

- 4 Tip of the Month A flooring option for indoor puppy and skill training. By Laura Simonelli
- 5 Editorializing: Can You Handle It? Life often gets in the way of agility. Most of us have gone to train or trial under-slept, with the wrong food to fuel us, with divided focus, and without all the skills we need to be successful. Don't beat yourself up over it or feel like you've failed your dog. By Brenna Fender

- 19 The 25% Solution: Sequences for Small Spaces This month work on your lead-out skills as well as get some tips for effectively using the practice jump before a run. By John Reid
- 21 Would I Do It Differently? Reflecting on Loss It's heartbreaking to lose a dog at any age, but what happens when you lose a very young dog that you had such great plans and goals for? By Elizabeth Staley
- 27 Canine Fitness Exercise Case Study Dogs with bilateral hip dysplasia may benefit physically and psychologically from being involved in a structured exercise program developed by a professional.
  By Lisa Schmit, Ph.D., CCFT, CPMP
- 35 Backyard Dogs Use these drills to work on strengthening and maintaining your dog's weave pole fluency. By Dudley Shumate
- 37 The Lonely World of Dog Sports For the most part, dog sports are solitary endeavors. We aren't part of a bigger team, and our friends at trials are usually focused on their own dogs. Without a natural support system, we're on our own to create a group that wants to see us win. By Julie Bacon
- 39 Leaving the Ring Early Why is leaving the ring early referred to as, "the walk of shame?" There should be no shame in getting out there and competing with your dog, and there should definitely not be shame if you choose to end the run early. By Megan Foster
- 40 Power Paws Drills: International Skills Tunnel to Tunnel This month's setup has two tunnels prominent in each of the drills. By Nancy Gyes
- 49 The At-Home Sports Medicine Assessment Knowing your dog's body allows you to understand what is normal and what is not, to be able to identify areas that have changed over time or that may need extra attention before or after training, a trial, a hike, or a run.

  By Dr. Sherman Canapp, Dr. Debra Canapp, and Allyson Canapp
- 54 Sometimes, You Just Gotta Cheat No matter how fast a handler may be, dogs will nearly always be faster. If our dogs can outrun us, how do we stay close to, or get in front of them? Playing fair and matching our dogs' stride for stride just won't work. So, let's learn to cheat. By Mike Padgett
